Gregg's Good News

We live in a unique time period. People are living much longer than in previous centuries. As a result, numerous generations are co-existing. Those who devote time to this reality note that people from the various generations typically have their own collection of preferences and distinguishing characteristics. That can create significant conflict in the workplace and other social venues.

In a church setting, we have the unique advantage of foundational beliefs like, "Love one another," and "Honor one another above yourselves." The metaphor of church as body points to the uniqueness of each church member as an asset to the ministry of the church rather than a liability. Those values make it easier to get along rather than being divided by our differences. We can all be thankful that God put us together as a church and consequently, all be fully invested in mission, service and sacrifice.

I belong to a group called "Baby Boomers." Birth dates of this generation are typically cited as 1946-1964. One of the things transpiring for many people in this generation is retirement from work. As you enter or contemplate that life transition, be sure to answer the questions:

1. How will that impact my Christian life?

2. Do I 'retire' or use the new freedom to be even more passionately imitating Jesus?

3. Who, of a younger generation, will I invest in?

PM PREVIEW TONIGHT: 5:00 pm Prophecy of Jesus, part 3 Thoughts, Questions, Notes

Last week was a time of great learning. Gregg, Josh, and I enjoyed our time at Camp Yamhill at the NW Expositor's Seminar learning from Mark Powell and Mark Shipp. We had a great time with the men of the valley at the Eugene Church of Christ men's day. It was a time of great fellowship and encouragement as we listened to Randy Willingham share on Biblical Leadership.

At the time of this writing, the baby is still not here yet. Be praying for our soon to be moms, Amanda and Ashley. We look forward to meeting these new babies. Thank you all for your support and prayers during this season.
