Thomas' Takeaways

Thankful For...Thankfulness

In the last two weeks my mother and two sisters visited for a week and made some wonderful memories. Also, in the last two weeks my car, which was already in the shop because...I ran into a median...reasons, developed several other new conditions we'll have to deal with. In that same time, we were blessed with an amazing gift by a member to help with the car, but then were reminded of several other outstanding bills concerning our house in SD. It was Madison and Amy's birthday, but Amy's birthday was interrupted due to our fridge going out and the soonest time for a service call was in the middle of the day when we were with her parents. I made her favorite birthday cake, a chocolate chocolate cheesecake cake, while then also losing a good portion of our previous fridge contents. And 3 of 5 children still aren't sleeping too well...

You have your own list from the last two weeks I'm sure, maybe more. Life is full of ups and downs. Some you can control, some you can't. You'll have them due to things you did, and sometimes things will happen to you. The question is, which things will you choose to dwell on?

1st Thessalonians 5:18 tells us to give thanks in all circumstances, which is the will of God for us. This is hard during the downs. How can I be thankful for no sleep, or lack of finances, or a broken car? The thing is, being thankful is less about the specific thing you're focusing on and more about how you choose to not only look at your life, but what/who you trust in. Being thankful, especially during the downs, is to intentionally acknowledge that even though this is happening, you still are blessed with good things and a good God over all of it, and this will pass. Even modern psychology proves that choosing to be thankful when you're not eventually can literally rewire your brain to promote happiness, better health, better sleep, and improved self-esteem. Perhaps most importantly, it's a choice to let God work in you instead of being filled with frustration or anger. To see God in the dark, when we need Him most, makes Him that more obvious in the light. I'm thankful for thankfulness itself, and how even it alone makes us more like God, for whom I'm most thankful. Grace to you.

Fall Retreat Report

Special thanks to Emily for putting together a worship set, Tom and Maria for cooking, and Lindsay for organizing the games. This was a fun retreat as we had college students and young adults from Corvallis, Keizer, and Eugene. The theme was "What a Mighty God We Serve," God's mighty acts recorded in Psalm 136. Howard Jones put together some great curriculum for us, and the main lesson was we are not only saved "from" sin, we are saved "to" be the Holy People of God. I'm proud of our students for digging into Scripture and praising God together!
